China's Child Contracts Dr Bao-Er
China began opening up to the West in 1978. Since then China has signed a range of international agreements (such as the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child) and adopted a large number of Westernized laws, which include a wide range of child-promises, that is, promises aimed at minimizing child-harm. This book develops a basic philosophical framework with which to explore and analyze China's child-promises.
