The Sourcebook for Speech and Language Assessment is designed to provide speech-language pathologists and other special education professionals with a comprehensive collection of informal assessment resources that can be used to identify individuals with communication disorders and to plan individualized intervention programs. Criterion-referenced assessment tasks, observational record forms, skills checklists, and other materials are included. Use the assessment tools with children or adults to identify learning needs, plan intervention programs, and evaluate progress.

New resources for assessing autism and other disorders have been added to the new second edition.

You will use the resources in this book on a daily basis to assess articulation/phonology, phonological awareness, language, voice, and fluency. You will have dozens of assessment measures to choose from so that you can individualize the assessment based on the specific problems observed. All of the record forms can be reproduced as often as necessary- no need to spend money on large packages of record forms.

Guidelines are included for conducting assessments, distinguishing differences from disorders, and determining whether or not intervention is warranted. Procedures are described for assessing how students respond to language learning activities, a critical factor in identifying individuals who truly need the direct services of a speech-language pathologist. This book will help you pinpoint specific problems that may be indicative of a language disorder.
